SS.CC. WOMEN COMMITTED TO YOUNG PEOPLE

When the 35th General Chapter spoke of paths for raising awareness and action to reach the new face of the Congregation, it stated that our commitment to youth and vocation ministry was one of our pastoral options.

In the canonical visit which we as a General government carried out to each of the communities of the Congregation, one of the themes which was always present in sharing the lived experience was in fact our work and commitment to youth and vocation ministry. We have appreciated the efforts that are being made to respond to this priority, as well as also pointing to some recommendations, geared towards creatively searching ways of become better involved in this ministry. As Pope Francis says: “it is necessary to accompany young people, to walk with them, to listen to them, to provoke them, motivate them... bring them to Jesus, always encouraging liberty so that they can respond to the Lord’s call freely and responsibly”.

“it is necessary to accompany young people, to walk with them, to listen to them, ... bring them to Jesus, always encouraging liberty so that they can respond to the Lord’s call freely and responsibly”.

The path which the Church has undertaken in the proclamation of the Joy of the Gospel, has had some very important landmarks such as: the Synod on the New Evangelization, Evangelii Gaudium and Amoris Laetitia; and now it is continuing with a new synodal proposal on the theme: “Young people, faith and vocational discernment”. The Church has decided to question itself on how it accompanies young people, so that they can recognize and welcome the call to love and life in all its fullness.

...if we sincerely look at our real and concrete commitment to them (young people), we see that in many places it is a task which is still pending, that needs reflection, discernment and action.

At the level of Congregation, concern for work with young people exists, however, if we sincerely look at our real and concrete commitment to them, we see that in many places it is a task which is still pending, that needs reflection, discernment and action.

Conscious that youth and vocation ministry is a task which belongs to everyone, I invite you to reflect on a text which can enlighten us and encourage us in our commitment to young people. It is a fragment taken from the message of Pope Francis to the International Congress on “Vocational Ministry and Consecrated Life. Horizons and hopes”, Rome 2017.

“Some convictions and challenges and proposals from Pope Francis on vocation ministry”

Convictions:

First conviction. Vocational service must be seen as the soul of all evangelization and of all the Church’s pastoral ministry. Faithful to this principle, I do not hesitate to affirm that the vocational ministry cannot be reduced to activities that are closed up in themselves. This could turn into proselytism, and could also lead to the temptation to practice lax and unwise recruitment” (Vita Consecrata, 64). The vocational ministry, however, must be placed in close relation with evangelization, education in the faith, so that vocational ministry is a true itinerary of faith and leads to a personal encounter with Christ, and with ordinary pastoral work, in special with the pastoral care of the family.

A second conviction is that vocational ministry finds its most appropriate “humus” in youth pastoral ministry. Youth ministry and pastoral ministry must go hand in hand. Vocational ministry is supported, emerges and develops in youth ministry. For its part, youth ministry, in order to be dynamic, complete, effective and truly formative, must be open to the vocational dimension. This means that the vocational dimension of youth ministry is not something that should be raised only at the end of the whole process or to a group that is particularly sensitive to a specific vocational call, but must be constantly raised throughout the process of evangelization and education in the faith of adolescents and young people.

A third conviction is that prayer must occupy a very important place in vocational ministry. The Lord says clearly: “Therefore pray the Lord of the harvest to send out labourers into His harvest” (Mt 9: 38). Prayer is the first and indispensable service we can offer to the cause of vocations. Since the vocation is always a gift from God, the vocational call and the response to that vocation can only resonate and be felt in prayer, without this being understood as an easy recourse to disengage from working for the evangelization of young people, so that they may be open to the Lords call. To pray for vocations presupposes, first of all, praying and working for fidelity to one’s vocation; creating environments where it is possible to listen to the Lords call; undertaking the journey to announce the “Gospel of the vocation”, to promote it and to provoke it. Whoever really prays for vocations, works tirelessly to create a vocational culture.

Some challenges:

Trust in the young and trust in the Lord. Confidence in young people, because there are many young people who, while they belong to the “selfie” generation or to this culture that seems “gaseous” rather than “fluid”, seek full meaning in their lives, even though they do not always look for it where can find it. This is where we consecrated people have an important role: to stay awake so as to awaken young people, to be centered in the Lord so that we can help the young to focus on Him. Very often young people expect from us an explicit proclamation of the “Gospel of vocation”, a courageous proposal, evangelically demanding and at the same time deeply human, without rebates and without rigidities. On the other hand, trust in the Lord, sure that He continues to awaken in the People of God various vocations for the service of the Kingdom. We must overcome the easy temptation that leads us to think that in some environments it is no longer possible to generate vocations. For God “nothing is impossible” (Lk 1: 37). Each segment of history is God’s time, even ours, because His Spirit blows where He wants, as He wants and when He wants (cf Jn 3: 8). Any station can be a “kairos” to gather the harvest (cf. Jn 4: 35-38).

Lucidity. It is necessary to have a clear outlook and, at the same time, an outlook of faith on the world, and in particular on the world of young people. It is essential to know well our society and the current generation of young people in such a way that, seeking the opportune means to announce the Good News, we can also announce the “Gospel of vocation”. Otherwise we would be giving answers to questions that nobody is asking.

Conviction. To suggest to a young person today to “come and follow me” (Jn 1: 39) requires evangelical audacity; the conviction that the following of Christ, also in the consecrated life, is worthwhile, and that the total gift of oneself to the cause of the Gospel is something beautiful that can give meaning to a whole life. Only in this way will pastoral vocation be a narration of what one lives and of what makes one’s life meaningful. And only then will vocational ministry be a convincing proposal. The young person, like all our contemporaries, no longer believes teachers so much, but rather wants to see witnesses of Christ (cf. Paul VI, Exhortation Evangelii nuntiandi, 41).

If we want the vocational proposal to follow Christ to touch the heart of young people, and for them to be attracted to Christ it must be:

Differentiated: in such a way that it responds to the questions that each young person poses, and offers to each one of them what is necessary to fulfil abundantly his desire to seek (Jn 10: 10). We must not forget that the Lord calls everyone by his name, with his history; He offers to and demands of each one a personal and nontransferable journey in his vocational response.

Narrative: The young person wants to see the model to follow, Jesus Christ, “narrated” in the concrete life of a consecrated person. The pastoral of “contagion”, of “come and see”, is the only truly evangelical vocational ministry, without the taste of proselytism. “Young people have a need for persons of reference, who are close by, credible, consistent and honest, in addition to places and occasions for testing their ability to relate to others” (Synod of Bishops, XV Ordinary General Assembly, Young people, faith and vocational discernment”, Preparatory Document, 2017, 2). Only a proposal of incarnated faith and vocation has the possibility of entering into the life of a young person.

Ecclesial: A proposal of faith or vocation to young people has to be made within the ecclesial framework of Vatican Council II. This is the “compass for the Church of the 21st century” (John Paul II, Apostolic Letter Novo Millennio ineunte, 43) and for the consecrated life of our times. This ecclesial framework demands commitment and participation in the life of the Church from young people, as actors and not as mere spectators. They must also feel that they are partakers of the consecrated life: their activities, their spirituality, their charism, their fraternal life, their way of living the following of Christ.

Evangelical: and as such, committed and responsible. The proposal of faith, as the vocational proposal to consecrated life, must start from the center of all pastoral ministry: Jesus Christ, as He is presented to us in the Gospel. This cannot be evaded, nor can it be a personal outlet or purely social commitment. The “pastoral show” or “pastoral hobbies” are far from being a pastoral vocation. The demands of the Gospel must be placed before the young person. The Gospel is demanding and must be lived radically and with sincerity. The young person must be placed in a situation in which he accepts responsibly the consequences of his own faith and the following of Christ. In this type of vocational ministry, it is not a question of recruiting social agents, but true disciples of Jesus with the new commandment of the Lord as a slogan and with the code of the beatitudes as a way of life.

Accompanied: One thing is clear in youth ministry: it is necessary to accompany young people, walk with them, listen to them, provoke them, move them so that they go beyond their comfort zone, awaken desire, interpret what they are living, take them to Jesus, always favoring the liberty to respond to the call of the Lord freely and responsibly (cf Synod of Bishops, XV Ordinary General Assembly, Young people, the faith and vocational discernment, Preparatory document, 2017, III, 1). It is necessary to create an atmosphere of trust, to make young people feel that they are loved as they are and for what they are. The text of the disciples of Emmaus can be a good example of accompaniment (cf Lk 24: 13-35). The personal relationship with young people on behalf of the consecrated is indispensable.

Persevering: With young people you have to persevere, sow and wait patiently for the seed to grow and one day to bear fruit. The mission of the youth pastoral agent requires that he is well aware that his job is to plant, whereas another will grow and others will reap the fruits.

Youthful: We cannot treat young people as if they were not young. Our youth ministry must strike the following notes: dynamic, participative, cheerful, hopeful, risky, confident. And always filled with God, which is what a young man needs most to fill his just yearning for fulfilment; filled with Jesus, which is the only path they have to travel, the only truth to which they are called to adhere, the only life for which it is worth giving everything (Jn 1.35ff).

Two things appear true to me in the topic of vocational ministry and consecrated life. The first is that there are no magical answers, and the second is that consecrated life, like the Church as a whole, is being called to carry out a true “pastoral conversion”, not only of language, but also of lifestyle, if wants to connect with young people and propose a path of faith and offer a vocational proposal.

Let no one rob us of the joy of following Jesus Christ and the courage to propose it to others as a way, truth and life (Jn 14, 6). Let us conquer our fears! It is time for young people to dream and the elderly to prophesy (Jl 2, 28). Let us arise now! “Hands to work”! (Ez 10, 4). The young await us. It’s time to move!
